

Lesson: Why do some animals live in groups?

behavior	the actions and reactions of living things colony	a group of animals of the same kind, such as ants, that live and work closely together communicate	to exchange information environment	a living thing's surroundings, including other living things and nonliving parts like soil, water, and air evidence	information that can be used to support or reject an idea observe	to pay close attention to something predator	an animal that hunts and eats other animals protection	the act of keeping something or someone safe social behavior	the behaviors of living things that live in groups solitary	lives mostly alone survive	to stay alive